EXALTA Group, which has a location in Hanover Township, Northampton County, said it is “beginning a new chapter” for its longstanding presence in the Lehigh Valley. The company was formed in 2025 through the merger of Intech, Resolve Surgical and Tyber Medical.

The company, which supports MedTech programs in trauma, extremities and spine, has grown to more than 1,700 employees. From Bethlehem, Exalta will lead its global network of 10 sites across three continents.

“Getting to launch in MedTech already requires tight coordination across development, regulatory, and manufacturing,” Exalta CEO Olivier Wolber said in a statement. “Where many programs struggle is maintaining that alignment as they scale. By bringing these capabilities together in one place, we reduce handoffs, shorten feedback loops and give customers a more controlled and predictable path from concept to launch and into sustained production.”

Founded in New Jersey, Tyber Medical moved to the Lehigh Valley in 2015 and expanded its facility on South Commerce Way in Lehigh Valley Industrial Park IV in 2019.

“Bethlehem has been part of our story for a long time, and this next chapter reflects where EXALTA is going,” Jeff Tyber, group president and board member, said in a statement. “We’re proud to be building the future of EXALTA right here in Bethlehem, alongside the talent and partners that make the Lehigh Valley such a strong home for MedTech.”
